Curator Statement

Selecting an art exhibition from a variety of artists might be compared to discovering what is under the Christmas tree or a birthday celebration with many gifts that are usually full of surprises and wonder. With enthusiasm and appreciation for the hard work and integrity that each artist brings to a work of art, I am honored to curate this exhibition.

My criteria for selecting a show from a body of work is to first review all the entries before making any final decision. I observe the individual pieces and try to intuitively respond to each one. I avoid making selections based on my likes or dislikes, but instead discover how each work of art speaks to me. That is the moment of truth when the art and viewer come together. It is my intention to respond to each work of art with a fresh view and consider how each piece shows an individual expression of self. Then, I analyze the work for its merits based upon creativity, personal commitment to an idea, integrity and use of the materials, as well as presentation and craftsmanship. I look for work that is a personal expression and carried out in a manner, which suits that concept. – Antoinette Martin
